<sup>2</sup> Total of "asylum" according to the German constitution and "refugee status" according to the 1951 Convention (people granted "asylum" are almost always granted refugee status in addition).

<sup>3</sup> Official statistics do not distinguish between subsidiary and humanitarian protection, but define various forms of protection as "prohibition of deportation".

<sup>4</sup> In the German statistics, the category of "otherwise closed" contains rejections as "inadmissible" (most often because another state is considered to be responsible for the asylum procedure under the terms of the Dublin regulation), therefore a clear distinction between these two categories is not possible.

* Jan-Nov 2013, NB: Validity of the available figures is limited by the fact that 56.5% of court decisions consisted of formal decisions („other settlements“), i.e. the proceedings were discontinued by either of the parties. This includes „positive decisions“ if the authorities inform the court that refugee status or another protection status will be granted to the appellant before the court has reached a decision.
